Equipping Missionaries and Families serving Internationally

the Middle East | pc: Daniel Q.

“I’ll never forget the first time I came to the Middle East one summer and ordered falafel by looking like an obnoxious foreigner and pointing everywhere but didn’t speak a word of the host language,” recalled Megan. As we can attest, living overseas can be both painfully awkward and at the same time wonderfully eye-opening. Every year we commission new missionaries to live, minister and serve in various countries throughout the world. They move their whole lives to tangibly love people of their host-country, through learning a new culture, sacrificially loving their team and faithfully trusting God.

Megan, serving with Bridges Int'l

One of those missionaries is our sweet friend Megan. We didn’t know her very well before she left abroad for two years but because we coached her leaders in years past, Nich got to visit her team in the Middle East on a mid-year coaching and care trip. To hear of her experiences abroad - both good and hard - dealing with racism when COVID-19 hit the world and navigating her coming home in the midst of a pandemic, it was extra special to know her family lived in nearby us here in Davis so we could continue to connect with her. Not only that but we found out she is a niece to dear friends from my (Tricia’s) home church!

A few weeks ago, Megan moved to San Francisco to foster community among international students and serve them as they navigate similar awkward moments of living in a different country. We are so proud of her as she seeks to love those from different nations, but of course miss her presence in Davis already - our kids especially! We love that our jobs are holistic and transcend the many years we are assigned different staff to work with. They become lifelong friends and we are invested in them, not just their ministry, as we see growth spurred on by the Lord in all aspects of their lives.
