

What we do in the summer

For summer break, students from Cal Poly SLO and from all over the US swarmed to San Diego to join us for Summer Project (or a mission trip). One common theme with most of the students was that they had little experience doing ministry on their own campuses. So we had two main goals with the summer project. The first goal was to equip the students with the skills to be confident in sharing their faith. The second goal was to talk to students on the San Diego college campuses about Christ. During the project, we did ministry at the University of California San Diego (UCSD) and San Diego State University (SDSU) campuses. We ended the summer having had 250 spiritual conversations, shared the full Gospel with 70, and 1 Vietnamese girl received Christ. How exciting is that: we really can reach the world through college students, even at our local campus. Another great aspect of the project was that one of the staff couples that was with us this summer is going to start a Crusade movement at UCSD next year and can follow up with the students we talked to this summer.

From the different students on project I have heard things like, “If you would have asked me 2 months ago if I would feel confident sharing my faith with a random student on campus I would have laughed at you”, and “a lot of the things I am learning here is all new and real good!”

Personally, we are excited that these students are being trained and changed for a life time. They will have skills to go back to their campus to be able to reach whatever pocket of students they are involved in, with the truth of Jesus.
