Cru Missionaries at Buffalo May 2025

The 2024-25 college school year is a page in history. I'm excited to share some highlights from the end of the semester before I head off to Boston for a Cru Summer Mission Trip, and then I'll come back to Buffalo to lead summer Cru.

Eggs and Big Questions

Easter time on college campuses is usually when the snow and ice start to melt, and students get more active. At the same time, God seems to do something special around His resurrection time, and students start asking more spiritual questions. So, at the University at Buffalo and Buffalo State, we put on one of our favorite outreach events. We packed hundreds of colorful plastic eggs with a flyer and candy, inviting students to an event where they could ask a panel of experts any questions they had about God, Jesus, the Bible, and more. It was amazing to see students take steps of faith by handing out the eggs to their friends, knocking on doors in the dorms, and tabling on the campuses. This event was both great for answering tough questions from non-believers and for strengthening the faith of our Cru students.

Moo accepts Christ by sharing her perspectives

One Friday in April, the staff and I trained our students on perspective banners, a disarming approach to spiritual conversations. Students share their perspectives on five important topics by choosing the picture that best represents their beliefs and explain their reasoning. After training, we set up the banners in the middle of the student union. The fun thing about these banners is that students approach us and ask, "What is this?" We had lots of great conversations. But my favorite conversation was with a girl named Moo (I triple-checked and yes, that is her real name). During our chat with Moo, we noticed her deep interest in spiritual things and her desire to connect with God. So it led us into sharing the Gospel with her. Towards the end of our conversation, Moo said, "I need this, I am ready to receive this right now!" In the picture, the girl on the left is Moo praying to receive Christ with Jules, the girl on our right. Jules is one of our Cru student leaders.
