Cal State Fullerton

Handing out popsicles and doing spiritual interest surveys on campus during the first week

This year, one of the main campuses where we are spending our time is Cal State Fullerton. Since there was no Destino movement on this campus, essentially we are starting from scratch. We spent the first week on campus doing as many surveys as possible to gauge the spiritual interest of students and surface those who might be interested in Destino or need to hear the gospel. Since that first week, we've spent most of our time contacting those students to meet up to talk more. One of those students was Janet.

Janet grew up going to church some, but wasn't really sure what it all meant. She was super friendly and was interested in hearing about Destino. She said she was a little nervous to go to something alone, especially something like Bible study when she didn't know much. I reassured her that all kinds of people would be there and she didn't have to be an expert. Then I had a chance to walk through the gospel with her and explain it in detail. As we finished, she said, "this makes so much more sense in English!" I'm pretty sure it had more to do with God's Spirit moving through His word, but Janet could then fully entrust her life to Christ. I'm so excited to continue meeting with her and to see her grow in her faith!

Fiestas Patrias

Last weekend we participated in a local marketing event for the Latino community. The booth was donated to Destino by one of the hosts of the event. Tens of thousands of people come to hear music, get food, and mostly find free stuff being given away. This was something very different for us, but we wanted to see what God had for us there. We were able to give away hundreds of items such as Bibles, books, water bottles and stickers with our website address. We pray that God will work in the lives of the people we encountered and we hope to be even more effective at similar events in the future.
