Matt's "Summer Job"

If your boss gave you eight weeks to step away from your normal job and work on something else highly strategic for the company's mission, what would you do? Train up a ton of volunteers? Develop relationships with vendors? Dream and scheme a fifteen year plan? Whatever it is, it would probably give you and your people fresh energy! In many ways, that's what Matt is doing this summer.

As I step away from my "normal job" of leading the AIA movement in Indianapolis, I'm stepping into something that will give me fresh energy for another school year. My job this summer is to coach nine new AIA interns in developing their team of ministry partners so they can report to their assignments in August. Five will be on U.S. campuses, two in Puerto Rico, and two in East Asia.

I like this "summer job" because I'm mobilizing laborers for the mission of reaching lost college students with the gospel. These new missionaries with AIA bring so much life, energy, and vision to the mission! Would you pray for me to have discernment in coaching them — that I would lead out with grace and believe the best, instill belief and reassurance when they feel weary, and not shy away from speaking truth when it's needed.

Family Update

Jenny is nursing Caroline well and she's putting on weight like a champ! But she is struggling to sleep more than 1-2 hours at night. We would love prayer for better sleep at night!

We recently visited Matt's family in Florida and enjoyed introducing Caroline to them. Linda's preferred grandmother name is "Lala."

Jenny visited her family in Chicago recently, and the preferred grandmother name of "Mema" became "Nemo" according to Caleb. LOL! :)
